Choose a place in the world

Creative exploration or an existing tribal life

Entry choices in the actual game. Existing characters also have a Resume option.

Choice	Starting experience
Random land - Creative	A random safe land location, Creative mode and flight.
Become a random adult NPC	Survival mode; the generated person's body, name, tribe, family links, languages and knowledge. Held items follow the same rules as NPC props.
Resume current character	Keep the existing person, location and inventory.

The controlled resident is excluded from NPC spawning. Their identity survives leaving for the world simulation and saving/reloading. Some residents naturally have empty hands; there is no universal starter bag.

Childhood and dialogue are not part of this prototype.

People, camps and communities

F3 + A opens the expanded life radar

Actual resident entry with the expanded radar. The dark background is mostly transparent.

Human marker	Meaning
Filled lilac dot	A physical human actor; grey indicates a corpse.
Mint hollow marker + centre	A camp site. Dim markers have not been physically loaded.
Dotted lilac ring + count	A community and its total population. Dim means coarse projection; nearby groups have local schedules.

The plot extends to 50 km and retains the expanded near-field scale and animal range rings. Human markers read the existing local simulation; opening the radar does not create another global NPC simulation.

Checks passed: 108 Core identity, deterministic-selection, equipment and serialization assertions; 28 packaged-game assertions covering both starts, tribe presence, no duplicate resident, family links, radar, HUD bounds and resuming the same person. No new performance claim is made from this check.